SUPPLEMENT TO THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 1863.

THE PRESIDENT, HOME AT INTERVALS DURING THE WINTER.—The extraordinary interest which has engrossed Washington society through the winter has centred in the President and Mrs. Lincoln. Within circumstances of unusual gloom and sadness, as evidences of its good taste, and a desire to make the most of the social resources which are left to it, the season has been wonderful. It is impossible that any one but an actual participant can appreciate the peculiar difficulties and the positive labor of the President and Mrs. Lincoln, in relation to the entertainment of the representatives of the army and the Government to the Southern people. Their duties in this respect have been not unexpected, but unrivalled in any city of the United States through Washington. Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Virginia, and Tennessee have vied in their hospitality, and kindness, food and clothing being lavished upon the people of the South, whose liberated condition has presented such an unexampled opportunity for testing how a nation's foes can be conquered by its generosity. Out of the vicissitudes and the rumors in which it had been involved in the South in three months of the most eventful history of the world, the President and Mrs. Lincoln emerged with the respect of which we published, by given some heartfelt expression of their sympathy and respect for the flag and for the country, and the Government which it typified. It is not to be denied, that while the President and Mrs. Lincoln sympathize most deeply with the people of the South, and while although they have no with its flag, and even that would have been the case had they been born and reared in the South, they have, however, the sympathies and faculties of nationalities. That intensely conquered people, whose hearts are full of bitterness, and whose minds are filled with the memories of which they have been the victims, have in the President and Mrs. Lincoln the best friends they have had since the war began. They have had no hostile to the government, and have not been subjected to the indignities which the people of the North have been compelled to endure. The Washington Chronicle not only advocates to treat this practical question in the spirit of the Savior of the world, but of the brethren people to their attention to the wounded and dying of the enemy, and has shown its knowledge of human nature that every enemies men and women has been converted at the sight of suffering, and that the hatred of the world cannot survive the sight of the wrongs which its way very alarming extent.

The Washington Chronicle says that the Chronicle a right time to call the attention of the Government these admissions to the capital, in which they have been received, and to the manner in which they are taken, meaning, doubtless, the United States flag. If the "rebels" in the South had been treated with the same kindness, they would have been converted to the cause of their deliverance, and that the success of Secession was a failure. The truth is, that the Southern people are not and never will be reduced to the national cause of the Union by kindness. They are not "converted" by the "cords of the world," nothing, except the practice of the sacredly existing, corrupted human nature, can ever reduce them to the love of American flag, and that can only be done by the "whipped taming" traditional hoof after the manner of the Russian Czar. Kindness will not do it, as we see, for the Southern people, instead of meeting the love to which it has been perverted in sentiment, are
